

A STORY ABOUT BACH

Johann Sebastian Bach is known as the "Father of Music" because he was the earliest great composer. When Bach was a boy, he wanted to borrow some of his brother's music, but his brother refused and hid the music up in the attic. However, Bach found out where it was and late at night he'd go up in the attic and copy the music. After all of Bach's copying, his brother discovered what was going on and burned up all the notes. This did not discourage Bach; he practiced and studied more than ever until he finally became one of our great musicians.
